Luján to Discuss American Clean Energy and Security Act, Building a Clean Energy Economy in New Mexico

Washington, DC – Rep. Ben Ray Luján will hold a town hall on clean energy on Thursday, July 2 in Santa Fe. The town hall will focus on the work Rep. Luján is doing to promote renewable energy development and encourage a growing green economy in New Mexico. Residents are invited to provide their input on building a clean energy economy. Last week, Rep. Luján joined his colleagues in the House of Representatives to vote for the American Clean Energy and Security Act, which will create clean energy jobs, reduce our dependence on foreign oil, and save billions of dollars long term.

“Our country’s dependence on foreign oil threatens our economy and security,” said Rep. Luján. “We need to take bold steps to become energy independent by growing a clean energy economy. With investments in renewable energy, we can create new jobs in a variety of industries across New Mexico. I look forward to bringing this discussion directly to the people of Santa Fe, so we can talk about the steps we need to take to build a clean energy economy in our state.”
